VESSEL IN BRITISH FLEET
London. Eng., Oct 12.—Strangest looking of all the ships with the British grand fleet is the Atlantic liner which has been transformed into a mother-ship for the seaplanes. There are platforms in place of the promemades where passengers used to lounge, bomis in place of deck-quoits, and the dining saloons have been fitted up as workshops. Everything that a seaplance needs in the way of repairs can be supplied.
"Here is our assortment of hombs," said an officer, showing an exhibit of different states on a shelf. "That one weighs a hundred pounds, the same as a six-inch shelf."
"What do you use them on?" he was VESSEL IN BRITISH FLEET

"Anything, from a German cruiser, if we get a chance at one, to a submarine. That hig bomb would finish a Zeppelin, too."

A crame that once had taken passengers trunks out of the hold lifted a seaplane off a platform and deposited it on the water, where it bounced on the waves before the motor was started and it skimmed across the surface for a handred yards or more, rose, circled around the fleet two or three times, and then disappeared out at sea. With its flouts it leoked clumsy beside an airplane—the difference between a duck and a hawk.
